MATCH SUMMARY

Côte d'Ivoire returns to the score before the break after being led by the Republic of Korea. The meeting changes again in favor of the Koreans as soon as the resumption. The Ivorians try their luck and address many centers, but do little to make their chances a reality. Korea is more effective in front of goal and widens the gap at the end of the game. For the Ivorian defense, the difficulty is to continue to protect its goal as the team seeks to return.

PLAYER SUMMARY MATCH

Obli evolves to the right of the central defense and largely participates in the pass game. He wins most of his duels and collects balls for his team. His long passes regularly find a partner and give him a solution to relaunch. It is less effective in the air, where it does not take over as often. The conservation of the ball in his camp also remains to be improved to limit the losses near his goal.

STRENGTHS OBSERVED

- He takes over in the majority of his duels, which helps his team take over the ball.
- His long passes regularly find a partner and offer a recovery solution.
- He recovers balls and allows his team to regain possession.

AXES OF PROGRESS

- Be more effective in aerial duels to better respond to balls disputed at height.
- Limit the losses in his camp to keep the ball further from his own goal.
- Better adjust its transmissions to reduce exchanges interrupted by an imprecise pass.

MATCH SUMMARY

Côte d'Ivoire remains in contact with Mexico until the second half. The Ivorians try their luck more, but find the framework little and fail to score. Mexico gets strikes more often on target and ends up taking the lead. The Ivorian offensive changes do not allow you to come back to the score. The defense therefore ends a meeting where you have to contain the opponent while leaving the team the possibility of equalizing.

PLAYER SUMMARY MATCH

Obli holds the position of central defender right and brings above all in the recovery of the ball. He wins the aerial duels he disputes and is also effective in all of his oppositions. His recoveries are in his camp, where he contributes to return the ball to his team. He succeeds in a significant part of his long passes, but some transmissions do not succeed. Losses in his half require more safety in the use of the ball.

STRENGTHS OBSERVED

- He wins his aerial duels and helps his team respond to the balls disputed at height.
- He recovers balloons in his camp to restore possession to the Ivorians.
- His successful long passes allow him to find partners remotely.

AXES OF PROGRESS

- Better adjust his long passes to avoid making the ball when looking for a partner remotely.
- Keep the ball more in his camp to reduce losses near his defense.

MATCH SUMMARY

Switzerland takes the advantage in the first half and returns at the break with a clear lead. She then accentuates her lead before the reduction of the Ivorian score at the end of the match. Côte d'Ivoire is trying more strikes, but Switzerland finds the framework more often and better concretizes its opportunities. The Ivorians make changes from the break without succeeding in overturning the meeting. The score forces their defense to continue responding to opposing attacks as the team seeks to catch up.

PLAYER SUMMARY MATCH

Obli retains precision in his passes despite the defeat of his team. He recovers balls and cuts opposing transmissions, which allows him to contribute to recovery. Its results are less satisfactory in duels, where it is more often beaten than it imposes itself. The aerial game is in particular a difficulty in this meeting. He also loses balls in his camp and must better secure their use. His performance thus remains divided between often fair transmissions and more difficult defensive oppositions.

STRENGTHS OBSERVED

- He often finds his partners through the pass and brings precision to traffic.
- His interceptions interrupt opposing transmissions and return the ball to his team.
- Its recoveries contribute to restoring possession to Ivorians despite the collective difficulties.

AXES OF PROGRESS

- Better adjust long passes that do not succeed to keep more balls during remote raises.
- Take the upper hand in the air to improve its efficiency on the balls disputed in height.
- Better to keep the ball in his camp to limit the losses near his defense.

Player Summary Evaluation Orientation

01 PLAYER SUMMARY

Obli evolves to the right of the central defense in the meetings studied with the Ivorian selection. His long game allows him to regularly find a distant partner and to participate in his team's first passes. His recoveries constitute another contribution that comes from one meeting to another. Its success in oppositions is less constant. He often takes over Mexico and Korea, but encounters more difficulties against Switzerland. The aerial game illustrates this gap: he succeeds in his meeting against Mexico, then is less effective against other opponents. The losses in his camp also return and limit the safety of his use of the ball. To progress, he must maintain his contribution to the recovery while becoming more reliable in these situations.

General study of the profile, independent of the needs of a particular club.

Cell report

Decision summary · Targeted orientation and proposal

05 SUMMARY OF THE CELL'S DECISION-MAKING

Obli deserves a follow-up for a right central defender role. His long game and his participation in the recovery give a concrete interest to the profile. The main reserve concerns its regularity in oppositions, particularly aerial, as well as possessions lost in its camp. The next observation should check if it remains precise when it has less time with the ball and if it can better repeat its air interventions. A match with his club will also make it possible to specify what he demonstrates in his division, beyond the youth selection matches. These checks will help to determine which sports needs to propose the file to.
